Investment objective

Aims to outperform the weighted average return of a composite index before tax and fees over rolling 5-year periods. As a secondary objective, aim to outperform the benchmark with a preference towards unrealized capital growth.

Investment approach

The fund aims to provide long-term capital growth by investing in a range of global asset classes. In actively managing the portfolio, the manager will tactically allocate investments across asset classes and geographic areas (including emerging markets) based on their potential to generate capital growth or reduce overall risk. The fund may use derivatives for efficient portfolio management and investment purposes. The manager will seek to manage the portfolio in a tax-aware manner. The fund typically aims to invest in a diversified portfolio mix with exposure to growth assets of around 70% and defensive assets of around 30%. The manager has the flexibility to allocate outside of the typical asset sector allocation guidelines where required (for example, during periods of market stress).

Market commentary

The month of April was a rollercoaster ride for markets. The S&P500 had posted its worst two-day performance since 2020 following US President Trump's reciprocal tariff announcement with a 10% minimum on all US imports. This was then followed by the best single day performance since 2008, when Trump declared a 90 day pause on these tariffs excluding China. Overall, the MSCI World index and MSCI Emerging Market index ended the month relatively unchanged, declining only 0.3% and 0.2% respectively. The Bloomberg Global Aggregate index performed well returning 2.9% in local currency total return terms.

The unpredictability of tariff policies and retaliatory measures continues to adversely impact global economies as trade uncertainty leads to deferred household spending and business investment decisions. In response to these challenges, several Asian central banks have lowered their policy rates. Although none have attributed rate cuts directly to tariffs, all banks have adopted a more cautious stance regarding the downside risks.

In Australia, The RBA kept the cash rate unchanged at 4.10% at the April meeting. Unemployment edged up to 4.1% in March, a touch higher than last month's revised level. Labour force growth again outpaced total employment which increased 32k. Consumer confidence deteriorated declining 6%. Overall, the ASX200 rose 3.6% on the back of the relief rally over the 90 day pause. Energy sector was the only sector ending the month negative.

Asset class insights include

Shares vs Fixed Income: risk on with a tilt to US equities

We are starting to turn a bit cautious on risk with expectations of higher volatilities. Our allocation to Australian government bonds continues to increase. Despite overall US growth remaining resilient supported by hard data, corporate and consumer sentiments have been impacted by the heightened policy uncertainty. Earnings are going to do the heavy lifting this year, but more uncertainties with the PE expansion part given uncertain policy environment and cautious corporate guidance.

With aggressive repricing of long end of yield curves across the global, duration is getting in multiple regions. Equity bond correlations turned back to negative amid the downside growth concerns over the recent periods.

Australian shares vs Global Shares

Relative signals for Australia vs World have turned roughly balanced. Commodities terms of trade however, has come off highs and remained sluggish and labour market remained weak. Having said that, given the magnitude of corrections since mid-February, we see a lot of the bad news being priced in and reduced some AU equity underweights.

Within global equities, regional allocations

We have trimmed the US towards more underweight: US activities have seen signs of weakness mostly in the survey data due to policy uncertainty, and the Labor market could also be impacted by the recent immigration and DOGE policy. Having said that, the Fed focusing on balancing growth and inflation risk are helpful to limit downside risk to growth. In the medium term, US growth could continue to moderate towards trend levels, though we don't worry about recession risks yet. Recent correction has brought down the froth of US equity valuations and it is currently close to fair value. We will continue to watch the policy agenda of the new administration, specifically regarding the impacts of fiscal policy, trade policy and industrial policy.

Despite the current economic activities remaining weak and certain industries facing structural challenges, surveyed data have shown tentative signs of bottoming out. We have observed major shifts in the policy front. The previously feared fiscal drag is now largely mitigated by the commitment to defence spending, which should support the near-term growth. Monetary policy remains supportive as ECB continues to cut rates. In our view, the ECB could continue the rate adjustment towards neutral as long as inflation risk remains benign.

The rally this time is driven by some fundamental support rather than purely sentiment as: key corporate earnings are seeing improvements, PMI data and housing market data show signs of stabilization, AI development in China triggered some rerating from the previous dirt-cheap valuations. Policies have remained highly supportive as the central government aims to remove the downside systematic risk to the overall economy. We will continue to watch the fiscal policy implementation closely to gauge sustainability of the economic recovery as some structural challenges remain. US Trade policy evolution towards China may also cause further market volatilities.

Within fixed income, duration vs. credit

Bond yields have been more volatile as the market narrative shifts amidst growth, inflation and policy expectations. We continue to have tactical positioning in duration. In the medium term, we remain constructive in bonds as must central banks have likely past the peak of policy tightening, while the all-in yield becomes more attractive. In the current environment, bonds are useful to hedge equity downsides. We remain of the view that Australian government bonds offer good value.

Near term, although investment grade spreads are tight, fundamentals do not support an imminent pick up in default rates. Thus, we have increased our allocation to global aggregate alongside of AU duration, as a better risk/reward play, as outlook for equities becomes a bit foggy.
